Homemakers Items

Clever cooks use little tricks to make food jobs quick and easy, say Extension specialists.

For instance, in Lenten season, when you want to know that a little lemon juice sprinkled over fish while cooking will neutralize the fish odor. To remove fish odor from cooking utensils, add two tablespoons ammonia to the dish water.

Don't cry when you prepare onions. Peel them under water. To extract juice from an onion, cut a slice from the root end and scrape juice from center with the edge of a teaspoon. To mince onion, peel, cut off a slice, then cut exposed surface into 1-8 inch squares and as tended. Music was furnished b y a deep as needed. Slice thin.

If you get your hands stained from vegetables, remove the stains by rubbing with a slice of lemon.

Make your rice white and fluffy by adding a teaspoon of lemon juice to each quart of cooking water.

To keep spaghetti from boiling over, add a tablespoon of cooking oil or shortening to the water in which you boil it.

To save yourself some pan-washing, when you melt chocolate, place the chocolate on waxed paper in top of a double boiler. Heat until melted.

If your coconut is somewhat dry, freshen it by steaming a few minutes in a sieve over boiling water.

I am somewhat overdue in acknowledging receipt of special editions of contemporary newspapers. Los Angeles, a dear friend always sends me a copy of the Festival of Roses edition of The Times. It is a fabulous and treasured edition of one of our major papers. And Frank Puckett, of Burlington, N. C., faithfully remembers us when he sends newspapers gets lout centennial edition. Harry is forever the plant there, and we are sure it is a splendid work. And we have had for several weeks the Jamestown Centennial edition of the leading newspaper. We thank Virginia Christian Koos for sent to us, and, bless you, Erwin, thanks a million. And, of course, brother L. N. Hernicall, the annual historical edition of the Daily Press daily from Casper, Wyo. He reads it, and then he sends it on to us. Now, all this adds a lot of reading—but, I do love reading, and am always delighted to have friends remember me.

Bless him, comes for- mer Joe P. Paulette, of the Farmville—an old friend from up north — who brings us a cheerful treasure of old newspaper documents, such as old deeds — which go back for over 100 years. I have not yet had time to catalog this collection, but will do so, and here and there and commend those who are interested enough to place their old papers in the hands of those who will love and cherish and cherish and preservation of them.

I am not stretching the point too much to say that April 9, 1865 was the end of one age and the beginning of another. That it marked the end of an age is now clearly seen. But, our attention in this respect is turned to the fact that April 9, 1865, one Marcus, Wolf, demonstrated that you could have a controlled explosion of gunpowder and develop propulsion. In short, he invented the automobile. Some years ago, I did a full length article, on the subject of Marcus, and I believe that it has been inadequately acclaimed. Most of the automobile revolutionized as many things. (Heavens me, think of what Stonewall Jackson would have done with a few of them!) But, I wanted, too, today, to mention that there were many men in the dawning of the automobile age. Many historians acclaim Ransom E. Seldon, of Rochester, N. Y., as the success in developing an internal combustion motor buggy. He had one difficulty with his working model, but this basic thinking helped set off the automotive age. Then, in 1893, the Duryea "Buggynaut" appeared and was picked up by the late P. T. Barnum and displayed as the world's First Real Automobile. All of those early cars actually amounted to buggies with tiny motors. The one cylinder motor was under the driver's seat, and was cranked from the side. There was no top, windshield, horn or headlight. It was as late as my memory serves me that we began to get a few windshields and horns. And, so many makes. In our time, big cars has swallowed up competition, so that the automotive field is a very venturesome for any newcomer. But in the year 1900, when the Automobile Show was held in Madison Square Garden in New York there were seventeen different cars on display, and by 1904, the Show had no less than 150 makes of manufacturers!

There is growing interest in antique cars. All over the nation, the clubs have rounded up old cars like Ford, Duryea, the Stanley Steamer, Maxwell, Mercer, Stutz, Packard, down to the Overland, Durant, Cadillac, Reo and Metz and scores, literally scores, of other famous names. Antique cars are quite the thing at the present, and, in my opinion, it all goes back to the inventor Marcus, and his demonstration in Vienna on April 9, 1865.

At the Fredericksburg fat-cattle sale February 19, and at Richmond sale February 26, prices were at or near the bottom for the winter, with the better end of the choice cattle topping at around 25c a pound.
